

The best ever brunch spots in London

FOOD & DRINK

By GQ
18 October 2019

The Stratford Brasserie

Just a stone's throw away from Westfield, The Stratford Brasserie is the place to go if you're in need of some respite from the bustle of shoppers. Serene, elegant and refined, you'd barely know that a mega-sized shopping centre is around the corner while dining here. Food-wise, you'll be able to find your favourite brunch staples on the menu, from avo toast to pancakes, but why not push the boat out and try one of its more interesting dishes such as the cauliflower burger instead?

GQ recommends: Forget chicken and waffles, it's the chicken and churros that really shine at The Stratford Brasserie. Paired with a tangy side salad with ranch dressing, it somehow manages to be both light and outrageously indulgent at the same time. Polish your meal off with the choux bun that's filled with chocolate ice cream and then retreat back to your sofa for a food-coma kip.

Queen Elizabeth Olympic Park, 20 International Way, London E20 1FD. thestratford.com